Life of Matthew F. Maury.

[The following interesting review, which we have been obliged somewhat to abridge, appeared several weeks ago in the Lynch-burg Daily News. We intended to repro-duce it at the time it came out but the pa ner was somehow mislaid. It will, however, appeared several weeks ago in the Lynchper was somehow mislaid. It will, however, well repay perusal now .- ED GAZETTE]

The recent biography of Matthew Fontaine Maury, by his daughter, Mrs. S. Wellford Corbin, of King George county, has been admirably done in hearly every respect. The authoress has had the fine taste, cot only to state on the title page that the book was "compiled" by her, but to make it very largely a compilation in fact, in which the subject speaks for himself in letters, on the one hand to public men, or eminent men of science, and on the other to bis personal friends and the members of his own family.

One of the first things that strikes the eye on opening this instructive book, is the fact that it is printed and published in London—a fact full of painful suggestions. There were doubtless excellent reasons why she found herself under the necessity of placing the memorial of her distinguished father in the hands of a London publishing house, instead of one in this country; for, while no word of explanation from her is found in the book itself, snough appears of the generous appreciation with which Capt. Maury's achievements in practical science were held by the Humbolts, the LeVerriers, Quotelets, Jansens, Fliz Roys—bosts of the first scientific men of the world—and by the rulers of every civilized land on the ear; b; and also of the victous malignity towards him in the northern States, because when Virginia called on her sons to stand by her in her agony, he obeyed her call at he sacrifice of every consideration in human life save duty and honor. This contract, between the ac claim with which savants and princes delighted to honor and assist the man whose scientific labors had made him one of the world's benefactors and the jealous enmity and venom of small natures in the United States, furnishes ground for a shrewd conjecture why Mrs. Corbin published her book abroad. Yet no man born in the United States within this century has been comparable to Maury as a benefactor of the world Great as he become, he owed his eminence to his almost unaided exertions. His education was of the slightest. When he borrowed a horse to ride from Tennessee to Washington, with thirty dollars for his out-fit, to enter the navy, he was a youth of eighteen, whose education consisted in the little other that an "old field school" and a sittle other that an "old field school" and a country academy could bestow. There was no government school for midshipmen at that date (1825). But he was determined to make himself not only a thorough master of seamanship, but a mathematician and a philosopher. While keeping his watch on deck he would chalk diagrams on the cannon balls, and master the problems of spherical tripopometry from them. The first philosopher. While keeping his watch on deck he would chalk diagrams on the cannon balls, and master the problems of spherical trigonometry from them. The first fruits of these incessant studies was the publication, while he was still only a midshipman, and twenty-eight years of age, of his work on navigation. It was favorably noticed by the highest nautical authorities in England, and was adopted as the text book of the United States Navy.

In October, 1839, while on a journey from his father's home, in Tennessee, to New York, to join his ship, the stage in which

In England, and was adopted as the text book of the United States Navy. In October, 1839, while on a journey from his father's home, in Tennessee, to New York, to join his ship, the stage in which he was traveling was overturned near Som-erset, Ohio, by which accident his right leg was badly fractured, an injury which re-sulted in disability for duty at sea and sulted in disability for duty at sea, and a slight permanent lameness. As so often oc-curs, this seeming catastrophe was provi-dential to him and to the world. About 1842 he was put in charge of the "Depot of Charts and Instrumente" at Washington, a storage-office, which he speedily developed into the National Observatory and Hydro-graphical Department of the United States at Washington. Recurring to his long considered idea of mapping the winds and currents of the ocean, he collected together all the old log-books of the government ships, which for years had been laid away in the dust as rubbish, went carefully through thousands of them, with the aid of the young men under him, noting the entries as to winds and currents, and by enormous labor and untiring energy and industry worked out his famous "Charts and Sailing Directions." The immediate effect of them was to shorten every voyage of ev-ery ship on the ocean on an average about fifteen per centum, thus saving to the com-merce of mankind untold millions in every year. He might have copyrighted these and made bimself rich, but he was not that style of man. He not only made his great discovery a free gift to the world for the benefit of mankind, but by his own unassisted exertions he brought about the conference at Brussels in 1853 for the development of D. H. NARAMORE, 321 KING STREET,

22 Street in 1000 for the development of meteorological research, in which England, Russia, Belgium, France, Holland, Sweden and Norway Denmark and Norway, Denmark, Portugal, and the United States participated, soon to be joined as co operators by other powers. No sooner had be thus united the civilized world vations of winds and temperature and barometric conditions, pointing out their utility to agriculture as hardly less than they had discovered, and the practicability of the sub-marine telegraph cable was demonstrated.

* * If Maury had remained in Wash-ington in 1861, his statue would have been placed conspicuously there among the worthies when the nation become. Its atworthies whom the nation honors. Its at sence is a pitiful piece of national meanness. If he had accepted the invitation of the Archduke Constantine, Chief Admiral of Russia, given in July, 1861, as soon as the space, unless the excess is paid for at transient rates and under no circumstances will they be allowed to advertise other than their legitimate business in the banks of the Neva the scientific space contracted for. labors he had posecuted on those of the Potomac, his monument would have been conspicuously placed in St. Petersburg. It remains to be seen whether the ungratefulness of republics will be indefinitely illustrated by this country to one of its greatest, wisest, best and most beneficent sons. The inveteracy of the Federal Government drove him into a quasi banishment in Mexico. Thence he went penniless to England to meet his family. His European admirers, in June, 1866, presented him with a testimonial of 3000 soundings, whereby the submarine plateau between Newfoundland and Ireland was sented him with a testimonial of 3,000 guineas, and in 1868, the University of Cambridge conferred on him the degree of LL D. The amnesty hill of 1868 permitted his return to the United States, and in September of that year he entered on the duties of the Chair of Meteorology in the Virginia Military Institute, which was created for him. His last published work was his Physical Geography for schools. He died in the cal Geography for schools. He died in the

to mark the appreciation and gratitude of the United States is a disgrace to them, while it is unnecessary to perpetuate his fame; of that he himself made sure. "The Life of Maury" has been imported

MEDICINAL.

Take Simmons Liver One Dose WORTH

DEAR S. L. R.—FRIENDS: I consider one dose of Simmons' Liver Regulator worth $100. I was constipated, had headache, could eat nothing with satisfaction or appetite; had the blues and felt altogether out of sorts. I resorted to blue mass, calomel, quinine and all remedies suggested, but only obtained temporary relief. One dose of S. L. R. did me more good than the $100 worth of doctors and doctoring. Respectfully,

I have been a teacher for twenty years, and during that time have had repeated attacks of headache, produced by torpid liver, and I have been entirely cured by the use of Simmons' Liver Regulator. I found it to be of so mild a character in its action as not to interfere, in the least, with my duties in the school room. To those similarly situated and subject to same, I cannot too highly recommend Simmons' Liver Regulator.
